SACRAMENTO.

The opening of the campaign in Sacramento on Saturday night by the Republicans was a surprise even to the members of the party.

All the arrangements were made quietly and without any noticeable amount of shouting or any special appeals to the membership of the party to rally.

The procession was a spontaneous one, one exceedingly creditable, large, orderly, mainly and thoroughly representative. It was not a cheering and exuberant body of men on the march, but it manifested ample enthusiasm when it reached the grand stand and passed in review. No practiced observer could have seen it and not have been forcibly impressed with its excellent character, and with the unconcealed interest with which the immense crowds upon the streets received it.

At the rostrum there was a notably large gathering to hear the nominee for Governor. Colonel Markham made a good impression. Laying no claims to the skill of the finished orator, he nevertheless interested his hearers thoroughly, and held their undivided attention for half an hour by a plain, forcible, manly and sensible address. The path or strength of his remarks was found in the statement that he came before the people soliciting the office in their hands as an unpledged candidate. He declared that to no man had he made promise or suggestion of reward for his support, nor would he do so even to make his election positively certain. More than that, if elected to the position he would take the office with the solemn pledge set forth in a special message.

The tariff advocated by Republicans he found was enriching, not impoverishing the South, and that the leading Southern cities under it gained wonderful degrees of prosperity, and manufacturing industries sprang up as by magic.

He had resolved to occupy the gubernatorial chair, if at all, perfectly free, as an absolutely free man, and to be able to assume an attitude that would make it absolutely impossible for any one, by threat or temptation touching further political ambition, to influence his conduct in the slightest degree while in the office.

These announcements were received by the people with demonstrations of approval so warm and emphatic that there can be no mistaking the temper of the voters who heard them. If the reception of Colonel Markham in Sacramento is any indication of the spirit that animates the party generally throughout the State, then the election of Markham and the ticket of his party is assured.

THE MYSTERIOUS METAL.

Aluminum until very recently was an exceedingly costly metal. It was so difficult to produce, not being found native, that its price was exceedingly high and therefore its use very limited. It is found in combination with other elements in 195 different species of minerals and it must therefore constitute a great part of the substance of the earth. In small lots in the last few years the metal has been sold at $2 50 a pound when formerly it brought $20. The other day the most extensive manufacturing metallurgists in the country announced, that as they had perfected a new method of producing the metal, the price hereafter will be but $1 a pound.

This great reduction at once created a heavy demand for the article, and it will now enter largely into the products of the mechanic arts, for at that price it becomes a competitor with nickel and with tin in many lines. If it could be produced at half a dollar a pound it would very nearly displace copper.

The news comes from Chicago that a chemist of that city has discovered a process of producing aluminum from clay at a cost that will amount to but a few cents a pound. This is almost incredible. We are inclined to believe that he has not made the discovery he claims. The skilled metallurgists of the world have been engaged for more than a century in efforts to economize the cost of producing the metal, and it is only in recent years that it has been so cheapened as to be made known to the general public in articles of common use. It was under the researches of Deville, in 1855, that it became useful for the manufacture of articles of adornment. It seems impossible, in view of the known difficulty, expenditure of time and means and the intricacy of the processes employed in producing aluminum, that the Chicago chemist should have hit upon a method that will render it but little more costly than iron. But if we assume that he has, then a revolution will be worked in the metal market, and most kinds of skilled labor will feel the effects, not ill however, by any means. On the contrary, cheap aluminum will stimulate manufacture and revive decaying ones. It will create new lines of manufacture and will give us a cheap metal more desirable than any other for several uses.

For aluminum is a beautiful metal; the specialists describe it as of a bluish white cast, without odor or taste nearly as malleable as gold and silver, lighter than iron and nearly as strong, and nearly as good a conductor of electricity as silver. It does not oxidize in the air even at a red heat, is not easily tarnished, does not decompose water except at a white heat, is not blackened by sulphuretted hydrogen, and is not attacked by nitric acid, either dilute or concentrated at ordinary temperatures. It is easily affected, however, by caustic soda and potash.

Alloyed with one-third of silver it makes knives, forks and spoons that are harder than silver, quite as presentable and much more easily engraved upon. Another alloy with copper, nickel and antimony gives us a beautiful composite metal, and still another results in bell metal that has a rich, pure tone unequalled by that of any other metal. With ninety parts of copper and ten of aluminum, we have what is known as aluminum bronze, which is frequently employed in the manufacture of watch cases, watch chains, steaming for stoves, the bearings of machinery, etc.

All these and many other facts we learn from the scientific books, but it is also ascertained that it is very difficult to successfully solder or weld aluminum, and the authorities say that the high expectations regarding it have not been realized. However, that was written some years ago, and it is truly real that now it can be produced for a few cents a pound, it will certainly come into general use as was anticipated thirty years ago, when Daville so revived interest in it by his experiments and discoveries. Even as it is, at $1 a pound, it is sure to come very largely into uses of ordinary manufacture and construction.

A decided influence in behalf of Mr. Markham and the entire Republican ticket.

NOTE AND COMMENT.

J. N. H. Irwin has sold the San Jose Times to A. B. Ellis, George A. Muirson, C. T. Cleary, Charles A. Gage and E. B. Wishar, five practical newspaper men, who propose to run it as the official organ of the Democratic party of Santa Clara county.

H. DeLucy has commenced the publication of a daily evening paper at San Jose.

FELL DEAD.

A LODI CITIZEN DIES ALONE FROM HEART DISEASE.

Last Tuesday afternoon Jesse Phipps, a resident of Lodi, was found lying on his face on the floor of his kitchen, dead.

The Sentinel says that during the afternoon he had been doing some carpenter work for a neighbor and about half past 3 he went home. A few minutes after 4 Mrs. Cornwall sent her little boy after Mr. Phipps to have him do some more work.

The little fellow soon came running back saying Phipps was lying on the floor and that his face was covered with blood.

Mrs. Cornwall ran to the man's assistance, and found him dead. She then sent for Dr. W. H. Richardson, who arrived at once and called for help, but soon saw he was dead.

When she entered the room, a chair in which Phipps had evidently been sitting, was found near by on top of his pine chair. The man had been sitting in it and it is supposed that, on his return from his neighbor's, he sat down to have a smoke, and that his fatal illness, heart disease, came while in the chair, and that he fell over and died.

Coroner Beebe held an inquest this evening, and the jury brought in a verdict of death from heart disease.

Phipps was a native of Ohio, and was married to a girl. He removed to Lodi about six years ago from Walnut Grove, where he has a sister, Mrs. James Wise. He also has a sister in San Francisco and a brother in Lodi.

He was a carpenter and owned a small cottage which he owned. He was worth about $8000, which consisted mostly of money and mortgages.

WHY HE IS A REPUBLICAN.

Hon. James R. Chalmers, a well-known public man of the South, has written for an Eastern journal a paper setting forth the cause that made him, an ex-rebel, a Republican. Mr. Chalmers was sent to Congress in 1877 as a Democrat. He had been trained to believe that in that party only was there protection for the rights of the citizen under the Constitution; but the Republican party represented unrighteousness and extravagance and enmity to the white race in its regard for the rights of the freedman. He had been taught that the Republican party had for its chief aim the humiliation of the people of the South, and entertained for them only bitterness and hatred.

When he took his seat in Congress his eyes were opened, and he began to realize that he had entertained prejudices unwarrantably. His district on the Mississippi river was then sadly in need of increased mail facilities. He found the Republicans all willing and anxious to grant them, while the Democrats were opposed for partisan reasons.

He found the Republicans all willing and anxious to grant them, while the Democrats were opposed for partisan reasons.

When he took his seat in Congress his eyes were opened, and he began to realize that he had entertained prejudices unwarrantably. His district on the Mississippi river was then sadly in need of increased mail facilities. He found the Republicans all willing and anxious to grant them, while the Democrats were opposed for partisan reasons.

When he took his seat in Congress his eyes were opened,

THE TRUE GENTLEMAN.
As He Was Understood by Cardinal Newman.

This is Cardinal Newman's definition of a gentleman. The remarkable passage occurs in his "IX. Discourses Addressed to the Catholics in Dublin."

It is almost a definition of a gentleman to say that he is one who never inflicts pain upon another. His conduct is both refined and, as far as it goes, stately. He is mainly occupied in merely removing those which hinder the free and unhampered action of those about him, and he concerns in their movements rather than takes the initiative himself. His benefits may be considered as parallel to what are called comforts or conveniences in arrangements of a more nature-like an easy-chair, a good fire, a good book, etc., to provide both means for rest and animal heat without them. The true gentleman, in like manner, carefully avoids whatever may cause a jar or a jolt in the minds of those with whom he is cast—all clashing of opinion, or collision of feeling, all restraint, or suspicion, or gloom, or resentment, in his presence, so as to move every one in their ease and at home.

He has his eyes on all his company; he is tender toward the bashful, gentle toward the distant, and merciful toward the absurd.

If he can recollect to whom he is speaking; he guards against unseemly allusions or remarks which may irritate; he is seldom angry, and, if he is, he tries to move every one in their ease and at home. Among the celebrated rivers is the Columbia, which is said to be the greatest in the world. It is 1,200 miles long, and its waters yield the largest salmon. At the Moisie we took on board fish weighing 50 pounds on our return trip, and picked up, before we got back, some 3,000 salmon.

Inside of us between us and the shore, we saw a thresher, about thirty or forty feet long, playing, leaping into the air and falling down in this manner a dozen times. It is said the sword-fish accompanies them, and when they fall on top of the sword-fish stalks him down.

The steamer touched all along the coast, going as far as the Nootka, immortalized in print by Billy Florence, who, with his companions, the Duke of Beaufort, Sir John Reid and others, killed any quantity of salmon there.
